Vibrio parahaemolyticus is a major human pathogen. The mechanism by which V. parahaemolyticus kills its host cells is not well understood. In this study, it was shown that the cytosolic calcium concentration was transiently increased at early time points of V. parahaemolyticus infection. The endoplasmic reticulum (ER) stress response was activated during infection. Infection-induced ER stress resulted in the activation of the unfolded protein response (UPR), including the up-regulation of GRP78 and CHOP. The components of autophagy, LC3 and Beclin 1, were also up-regulated during infection. Pharmacological inhibition of ER stress or autophagy activation resulted in a reduction of infection-induced cell death, but was not sufficient to completely inhibit the cytotoxicity of V. parahaemolyticus. In contrast, cells in which ER stress was induced by thapsigargin treatment were more susceptible to infection. These findings demonstrate that ER stress and autophagy play a role in the cytotoxicity of V. parahaemolyticus.SPONTANEANATION with Paul F. Tompkins #18 Paul F. Tompkins welcomes his father to the show for the first time to discuss his father's favorite color, the letters of the word 'turkey', the greatest pet of all time, and what he loves more than anything. Paul's dad Phil joins the cast in the last half of the show to talk about how smart he is, how smart his kids are, and the time he was on an episode of The Muppets. They'll tell you their parents are both dead, and how their parents are both dead. Plus, Robin's fiancé joins us to talk
