ISO 5199 ChemICal PumPS.pdf

The well-known standard for centrifugal pumps, known as ASME B73.1, dates back to 1955 when efforts were made to develop standards for chemical pumps. At that time, it was important that the pumps were suitable for almost any working pressure, regardless of temperature. Thus, a standard was created for pumping installations, which provided that pumps operate at various pressures and temperatures.As a result, different types of centrifugal pumps have emerged: vacuum pumps, high pressure pumps, low pressure pumps, high temperature pumps, and low temperature pumps. This was a revolutionary achievement.
