Understanding the impacts of climate change and the need for more sustainable air travel and shipping Climatic risks for the airline industry The airline industry has seen many changes in recent years and with them, a lot of expectations from the industry and from society in general. From the requirement to have pilots that are able to perform a safe landing in adverse weather conditions to cleaner and greener engines, technology has improved significantly over the past 20 years. So has the demands of the public on airlines. Airlines have started providing more comfort for their customers and are trying to cater for the diversity of their passengers. One of the biggest impacts of this diversity and changes in society is the change in average passenger weights. Since 2000, the number of passengers worldwide has increased significantly from 280 million to almost 600 million. Different stakeholders and their concerns The stakeholders in the airline industry are numerous. There is the airline and the airlines customers, employees, shareholders and many more. Each stakeholder has their own concerns and will strive to make their particular stakeholder the winner. The airline industry, like other sectors of society, is strongly affected by climate change. The airline industry contributes about 4% of global energy use and 2% of carbon dioxide emissions. Recently, these figures have started to show a clear upward trend, and with these trends, it is to be expected that the airline industry will have a bigger impact on climate change than ever before. Airlines have been struggling to keep up with the green agenda, but unfortunately, there is also an increasing number of reports of passenger safety issues associated with the climate. In October 2018, the head of aviation at the European Union (EU) Commission, Ursula von der Leyen, noted that "climate change is becoming a risk factor for all kinds of issues on the ground," in an interview with German newspaper Die Welt. Climate change also has an impact on the aviation industry, as passenger weights and average temperatures are becoming bigger. To better understand the impact of climate change and the different needs and concerns of the different stakeholders, it is important to have a good understanding of each stakeholder and their concerns. Impact of climate change on the airline industry Climate change impacts and challenges Climate change has led to a rise in extreme weather events such as heat waves and heavy rainfall. These events cause damage to airports, cities and other infrastructure in the airport area. The impacts of climate change Innovations in aviation technology have increased the
