As I understand it, Buddhism is ultimately nihilism. That is, there is no objective truth. It's just a game we play (I'm using this phrase from Dennis Prager in a slightly different way). As an example, the Buddha said that desire is the beginning of suffering. I might ask, "Why should I avoid desire? I enjoy life." The Buddha offered an analogy with the sun is still a sun, regardless of its action of heat and the essence of the sun is timeless. That is, there's no objective reason to avoid the sun or seek the sun. In the same way, because there's no inherent reason for suffering, there's no inherent reason for suffering an inhilistic belief, but I don't follow in all of what the Buddha says 3ef4e8ef8d
