Google made the wait short but very well, announcing a new flagship smartphone, the Pixel XL. In the beginning Google announced the existence of the Pixel XL on the 24th of March, but it wasn't until the 29th of the same month that they went live and revealed the design. Google decided to keep the design unaltered, although I can't tell if that was the idea of the company or not. I can understand the choice of a modular design but I do not think it suits the market of smartphones and the Google Pixel phone. They will sell it, but it is not the Google Pixel that they want to sell. Design The phone's body is formed in an anodized aluminum with a pleasant texture. In the middle of the body, there are two cameras, the top one with a 10 MP sensor and the bottom one with an 8 MP sensor. The sides are slightly curved, and at the bottom of the body there is an antenna band. Google Pixel XL has a 5.5 inches display with a 1080p resolution. It is accompanied by an sRGB display so the colours are correct but I'm not sure if this is the case for the entire smartphone or just the Google Pixel phone. Google Pixel XL's body is not as heavy as you would expect from the dimensions of the device. However, it is not the most comfortable smartphone in the market. Google pixel XL has a smaller footprint than other smartphones in its class. The smartphone will come with a metal body in the same colour as the phone itself, meaning you'll have a black or white device, but if you'd rather have a different colour I'm not sure what you can do. Build Quality Google Pixel XL is not the best built smartphone but I think it is the best smartphone with an aluminium body. I also find it interesting that the device is as solid 1d6a3396d6
