Sad to say, but as F.A.M.E. (Fascinating Alternatives To Music Ensemble) is a relatively unknown metal band (at least in Sweden) they're not exactly playing to an audience full of people just as enthused about their music as they are themselves. In the opening moments of "Blood Terror" I can almost hear the disdain in the voice of Mr. Black Metal himself Anders Nystrom – who after all, is the band's vocalist – as he spits out the lines "You'll never be happy, regardless what you do." With words like that in hand it can easily be seen that F.A.M.E. is full of hatred and hatred in the worst sense of the word. On stage, they are nothing but men and women screaming bloodthirsty lyrics into an audience that seems genuinely uninterested. When they start up again with "In the Darkest Hour", Nystrom screams "We are the two-headed hydra..." at his adoring (and powerless) fans. The song has a sort of malevolent and demonic quality, and that's something all too familiar when it comes to this band. What's interesting is that Nystrom's voice almost feels like it's straight out of a horror movie, and he perfectly embodies a lot of characteristics that go along with the kind of music this band plays. In “In the Darkest Hour” he’s the ghoulish, blood-crazed monster, and the lyrics at the beginning are almost pure black metal as Nystrom sings about some mythical figure he wants to exterminate. It’s no wonder that Nystrom’s voice sounds so good on this kind of music. And maybe that’s exactly why I don’t find F.A.M.E. all that interesting – it’s still that same standard song and verse, standard chorus and verse, evil dude with a demonic voice spouting hatred and venom. And while I admire the relentless energy that you can feel from the band during their live shows, it’s a kind of energy that I’d prefer not to experience when I’m just chilling at home. Most of the time, it feels like I’m too old to be a fan of a band that only started making music about three years ago. And yet, I’m still listening to the latest music by ATIGE and I feel that I can
