I have this popup with the purpose of informing the user that the server "cannot be reached" I got it via the attached script, the script runs and closes immediately. I used a div.widget and loaded a.js file from here. I have a windows mobile device, which has internet access through a mobile router. I want to set this as a home hotspot for wireless devices to connect to internet from the windows device. I have used the SD card contents to install a dhcp server. The wifi router configuratoin is as follows: This is a fairly easy case to solve. We have a very simple application. A page that is user controlled, which makes a call to a REST web service. It returns some basic information about the user. What we are interested in is the X-Credentials response element. We tried to get this with cURL and was able to figure out how to specify the cookies to use with it. However, in our case, we cannot get to do this because it is protected with authType=bearer. What we'd like to do is take a cookie or set of cookies that already exist and have it set as the X-Credentials header. Is this something that can be done? If so, what is the right method of doing it? Hi, I am trying to add a page to the website where a user can select the delivery type (Mail, Gmail, or Facebook) and the date range that they would like to see. The user is also able to select the website (example: [url removed, login to view]). I am following this tutorial: My issue is that when I try to create a scheduled task that runs the code in the tutorial, I get an error message that says: "An unhandled exception of type 'System.Runtime.InteropServices.COMException' occurred in mscorlib.dll. Additional information: Cannot find the COM server for type
