Movie Info: Release Date: 10 Oct 2011 Runtime: 00:41:23. Recognition of Babesia bovis in whole blood smears by a newly developed quantitative real-time PCR. Bovine babesiosis is caused by tick-transmitted intraerythrocytic protozoan parasites of the genus Babesia. The occurrence of Babesia infections has been documented in many parts of the world, but conventional diagnostic methods are of limited use in parasitology, as species differentiation requires long-term culturing. The objective of this study was to develop a real-time PCR assay for specific detection of Babesia bovis in whole blood samples. Primer and probe combinations were designed within the 18S rRNA genes of B. bovis and Babesia bigemina. A plasmid, containing a 100 bp fragment of the 18S rRNA gene of B. bovis was used as a positive control. The optimal thermocycling conditions were optimised using the generated standard curve for analysis of samples. The limit of detection of the assay for B. bovis was 102 parasites/ml and amplification of the target sequence was negative in blood samples from uninfected animals. In an independent field trial, blood samples collected from 429 calves from a tick-transmission study in South Africa, were tested by a conventional PCR and the newly developed quantitative real-time PCR. While only 3/432 animals were positive by the conventional PCR, a total of 31/432 animals were positive by the real-time PCR, indicating a 50% improvement in sensitivity. The results of this study indicate that the newly developed qRT-PCR assay is a promising tool for early diagnosis and monitoring of B. bovis infections..ReadHeader(), 1cb139a0ed
