According to the National Association of County and City Health Officials, in the U.S., healthcare costs have doubled over the past two decades. With the aging of the population and advances in medicine and technology, the need to extend coverage to low-income individuals has never been more important. Low-income individuals have more needs than middle-income individuals, and the basic needs of food, shelter, and clothing are necessary regardless of income. The Affordable Care Act was designed to provide healthcare for low-income individuals and households; however, its implementation has proven to be a challenge. Lower-income individuals often have less access to healthcare and are less likely to have health insurance. The structure of the insurance market in the United States
