I am trying to get HTML from a URI for my windows phone app. If you look at the documentation you will notice that it has a overload for when the HTML was loaded before, but no overload for when it was not loaded. GetHtml(Uri uri, HttpContextBase httpContextBase, out IHtmlDocument htmlDocument); GetHtml(Uri uri, HttpContextBase httpContextBase, out IHtmlDocument htmlDocument, out string contentType); This is what I was using to get HTML: HtmlDocument htmlDoc = new HtmlDocument(); htmlDoc.LoadHtml(GetHtml(Uri.FromUri(url.AbsoluteUri.ToString()), httpContextBase, out htmlDoc)); So the overload for the first method would look like this: GetHtml(Uri uri, HttpContextBase httpContextBase, out IHtmlDocument htmlDocument); but they just refuse to add one for when it has already been loaded. The docs for it seem to have changed very recently. I have no idea why they refuse to do so. Would anyone know? A: Because the overload you describe is already implemented and just doesn't have the out parameters when already loaded. I suppose the code for GetHtml(Uri uri, HttpContextBase httpContextBase, out IHtmlDocument htmlDocument) is extremely simple, so they decided not to implement overload for the already loaded html.
